英文要約 模範解答

Some public libraries lend musical instruments so that people can try music without buying expensive equipment. Supporters say the programs make learning affordable, encourage social connections, and give children and adults opportunities to practice. However, instruments need maintenance, repairs cost money, and high demand requires fair borrowing rules and sufficient funding.

I think schools should offer more lessons about preserving local history. First, students can understand how their communities developed by studying old buildings, photographs, and stories. This knowledge may encourage them to care for places that might otherwise be forgotten. Second, local history provides opportunities for practical learning. Students could interview residents or visit museums, developing communication and research skills. Some schools may have limited budgets, but many activities can be organized with public libraries or volunteers. In my opinion, learning about the past can help young people make better decisions about their community’s future.
