大問4 英文要約 模範解答

Mobile libraries bring books and learning services to rural communities far from permanent branches. They improve access for families without cars, children, and older residents, sometimes offering computers or storytelling activities. However, buses carry limited collections, travel is costly, and bad weather can interrupt visits. Reliable schedules and maintenance are therefore essential.

大問5 意見英作文 模範解答

I think high schools should teach students how to manage personal money. First, teenagers will soon need to make decisions about saving, spending, and using bank accounts. Learning these basics at school could help them avoid expensive mistakes in adulthood. Second, lessons about budgets and online payment systems would be useful to students from many different backgrounds. Schools do not need to create a large new subject. They could include short activities in existing classes and use realistic examples. In my view, practical financial education would prepare students for independent life.
