大問4 英文要約 模範解答

Cooling centers offer free, air-conditioned public spaces during very hot weather. They can protect vulnerable residents and provide water, rest areas, and safety information. However, running the centers costs money, and some people cannot easily reach them or may not know they exist. Clear announcements and transportation support are therefore important.

大問5 意見英作文 模範解答

I think cities should make local buses free for people under eighteen. First, young people could travel to libraries, sports centers, and other educational activities even when their families have limited money. This would create more equal opportunities. Second, free buses might encourage teenagers to use public transportation instead of asking adults to drive them everywhere, reducing traffic on busy roads. Of course, buses still need money for fuel and drivers, so local governments would have to provide financial support.

In my view, the social benefits could justify a carefully planned program.
